

The animals in the jungle spend all day long online. They're so glued to their screens, they even forget to eat!

One day, Monkey comes up with a brilliant idea to make sure no one misses a meal—a food delivery service:

BANANANow

In the jungle, everything had become very modern and high-tech.

The animals were always online, glued to their phones, their tablets, their computers, and their video game consoles.

Hippo played online games with Crocodile, who lived two rivers over.

Giraffe was busy chatting on her computer—even with the animals close by!

Gorilla practiced strange poses for unique selfies.

The jungle creatures weren't swimming and playing in the river, they weren't stopping to enjoy the afternoon breeze, they weren't smiling... They were acting like robots!

One afternoon, Hippo's stomach let out a strange grumbling that was so loud, it sounded like a leopard growling...
And that gave Monkey an idea!

Some of them were even forgetting that they needed to eat!

If the animals were too busy to find food,
he'd deliver it straight to their doors!
And who knows? He might even make a fortune along the way!

"Listen here, big fellow," said Monkey.
Hippo didn't move, he just kept right on playing his video game.
