In a little town nestled among forests and mountains, there lives a fabulous group of the bravest boys and girls around.

They call themselves the Bold Bunch, and they're all brave, strong, swift, agile and intelligent.

The Bold Bunch are the best: they make their rounds through the town, always on the lookout for ways to be useful. They assist people in need of a helping hand, rescue animals from danger, and see to all sorts of odd jobs.

Ari and Leah are great friends, they're both extremely brave, and they've both just been accepted into the Bunch. Ari has the strength of an ox, and Leah is lightning fast.

One day, the Bunch decides to organize a trip into the forest. Ari and Leah are excited—it's the first time they've been out with the others like this. After hiking for several hours, they come to a stop near an old, abandoned house.

"We will test our bravery by venturing into this house," announces Jamie, the group's leader. "We'll go inside in groups of three. New members, you're with me."

Ari starts to tremble. He has an awful secret only Leah knows: he's terribly afraid of the dark! And there's not a speck of light inside that house.

Ari walks through the shadowy house. Leah squeezes his hand tight. Suddenly, he feels some sort of creepy crawly thing drop onto his head. He suppresses a scream, but a whimper escapes his lips.

At that same moment, Jamie switches on his flashlight.

“As soon as we get back to town, you’re out of the group!”

Ari stares at the ground, ashamed.

“But he was brave enough to go inside even though he was afraid!” Leah protests.

“Ari can’t be in the Bold Bunch.

Boys don’t cry!” Jamie decrees.
